“Reopening Long Island and Building a Fair Economy,” is a series on suburban labor organizing and worker power in the COVID pandemic and beyond. Presented by Hofstra Labor Studies and the Center for Labor and Democracy, in collaboration with Long Island Jobs with Justice and A.L.L.O.W. (Advancing Local Leadership Opportunities for Women).

Forum #2:

Care Work in the Covid Crisis: Challenges & Opportunities

July 7th, 2-3:30 pm – live call-in program.

The COVID crisis closed schools and child care centers, compromised adult care facilities, and presented safety risks for home health workers, posing enormous financial and mental health challenges to millions of working people. Failure to resolve those challenges will threaten the prospects for building a fair and sustainable local and national economic recovery. Join the discussion on how best to rethink New York and national care policies for a more just and equitable future.

Panelists:

- Traci Levy, Associate Professor & Chair, Political Science, Adelphi University,
- Jennifer Rojas, Executive Director, Child Care Council of Suffolk County,
- Onika Shepherd-Bernabe, Long Island Political Director, 1199 SEIU.

Moderator: Mary Anne Trasciatti, Director, Hofstra University Labor Studies Program
